

I am greatly concerned by this increase in latitude for wiretaps and other surveillance. Although there are legitimate uses for such measures, making an action too streamlined removes an important check on rash or ill-advised action. I believe the government should have to go to some substantial bother to snoop on its citizens. If this burden is substantial, perhaps it is a sign we are snooping too much. At the very least, I would urge slow implementation of these measures in order to allow time for a more considered response. Thank you.